Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker and will later speak with EU Council President Tusk amid hopes of progress on the divorce issues: Britain's exit bill, the Irish border and the rights of citizens. Only then will the EU agree to move on discuss future relations, including trade.

Tusk said a breakthrough had come in the talks on the Irish border, as reported to him by Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar.

"Tell me why I like Mondays!" Tusk wrote in an optimistic Twitter message after his phone call with Dublin. "Getting closer to sufficient progress," he said. "Sufficient conditions have been met.

The breakthrough under discussion would allow for the border between the EU, Ireland and the U.K.'s Northern Ireland to remain transparent for trade. Both sides would promise to keep the trading rules compatible.

"Basically the British government would commit to maintain the full alignment of legislation where pertinent," said Belgian member of the European Parliament Philippe Lamberts.

Lamberts said he was "optimistic that the European (summit) can now agree to move discussion on to the
